Many programs will convert video automatically to a standard format, such as MPEG-2, MP4, or H.264. Some programs require you to do this conversion yourself, and some only convert frames, which may or may not include playback controls and other editing features. Editing in one of these formats is discussed in the following sections.

HIST1H4B Histone H4 is a protein that in humans is encoded by the HIST1H4B gene. Histones are basic nuclear proteins that are responsible for the nucleosome structure of the chromosomal fiber in eukaryotes. This gene is a member of the histone H4 gene family. The histones are generally thought to be tubular, and the tubular H4 histone is located in the center of the nucleosome. This gene contains two exons. In our last round of YC, we said that we wouldn't do any more projects that were about politics or getting rich quick, or about anything else that would require us to do "publicity" (I didn't think that meant social media stuff; maybe I was wrong). There's nothing wrong with publicity -- in fact, I think that's a real benefit -- but it's not what I want to be working on.My cofounder and I both love technology. We're small but tight-knit, and we have our act together. But we also hate being controlled by deadlines, clients, users, etc. This means we'll do stuff differently than everyone else, or at least, we'll try not to do stuff differently (meaning: we'll do it even if we don't really have to).That's our style. Do you want to work with us?Do you want us to be a small one-person team with no financial expectations?Do you want us to work really hard to keep control of our product?Here's the kind of project that sounds boring to us:1. We want to build a system with basic reporting and graphs, but not too much. The way that we could make this happen is to do a lot of the hard work in creating a general-purpose API, and then use one of the third-party libraries out there, like Highcharts. When you build a general-purpose API, you can start with just some basic reporting, and you can add the features as demand for them builds up, without being locked in to a particular technology or framework.

Biomechanical consequences of dendritic addition, deletion, or removal for an array of input thresholds. We study the biophysical impact on an array of dendritic compartments when one or more inputs are dropped during development. The initial state is homeostatic and non-leaking. We first consider the case where the drop of an input is compensated for by increasing all the other inputs. We show that the spatial pattern of synaptic activity at a point in the somatic arbor is affected by the type of drop, whether it is "maximal" or "minimal". Following this, we analyze the case where the drop of an input results in reduction in the firing rates at all other inputs. We determine the location and type of modifications in the spatial pattern of activity induced by the "minimal drop" case, as compared to the "maximal drop" case. Finally, we study the effects of drop on the activity patterns at the distal dendrites.It's amazing how far the condor has come in the world. It has been around since the Paleogene and is commonly believed to be extinct. But in 1992, a group of biologists found a condor tucked away on a private ranch near Banning, California. It wasn't until 1997, though, that scientists gave them the official name of the bird, which has adapted beautifully to the modern world. The condor is now one of the top 10 most threatened species on the planet and is up for federal protection because it's having hard time surviving in nature. CBS News The ranch near Banning is now the California Condor Conservation Center (CCCC), where scientists take care of these endangered birds to make sure they never lose the fight. The scientists feed the birds because they're able to manage their weight now. Before the Center was built, they had to hand feed them, and that would be like us feeding the birds in a prison. We brought over 200 pairs of eggs to grow up at the Center, where they are responsible for the babies' survival. We have 90 eggs already and will incubate them until the baby condors hatch. Once the chicks are born, they go back to the ranch to live with their parents until they are old enough to fly free.
