Women present with cardiac symptoms less often than men, possibly due to incomplete exposure to high-risk factors and/or a better prognosis. Cardiac risk stratification is often performed with non-invasive imaging in symptomatic women but the accuracy of the imaging tests has not been established in this population. This study aimed to evaluate the accuracy of standard-of-care diagnostic testing performed with cardiac imaging in symptomatic women. Women with acute chest pain and/or dyspnea were prospectively enrolled from multiple hospitals and underwent stress testing with cardiac imaging followed by coronary angiography (CA) or computed tomography angiography (CTA) if indicated. Diagnostic accuracy was evaluated by reviewing the index tests and clinical outcomes on a per-test basis. Of 456 symptomatic women, 401 (87.8%) underwent stress testing, of whom 319 (80.6%) received ≥1 type of cardiac imaging. The overall accuracy of the stress tests and cardiac imaging was 82.5% (95% confidence interval [CI], 79.4-85.4), 91.2% (95% CI, 88.3-93.5), and 79.6% (95% CI, 76.2-82.7) for resting electrocardiography (ECG) only, exercise ECG only, and stress ECG and imaging, respectively.
