Each day a new mystery plant appears on your desktop. From the photo you have to give it a name (link to your garden site) and a description. You don't need an internet connection, only your desktop PC. Place your mouse on the garden plant and press the left mouse button. A circle with a picture of the plant appears on your desktop. Click on the picture with the right mouse button to name your plant. You can write a description with the mouse. Close the picture with the right mouse button and click on the desktop icon to find your new, favorite plant. Sometimes when you do not see the picture on your desktop you can click inside the circle with your mouse and a picture will appear. I have been using this for quite some time and it has been very useful. If I don't have the plant and can't figure out how to identify it, the Garden Plant ID are like a living encyclopedia. Most are fairly self explanitory (unless there is something that is slightly off, such as with hostas). I have seen a couple of old posts on here recently about a program called Mind The Garden. Anyone have any experience with this type of software? Yes, it is like a very nice software version of the Garden Plant ID App described here. For those who don't know it, The Garden Plant ID tool can be used with your on-site garden community website. Registered members can upload plant photos to the site, which will then be shown on your desktop. Often these will be plants which you cannot identify from your desktop. In that case you can upload to the on-site community site and post a comment on it, or upload a photo of the plant. As it is an on-site community site, the picture of the plant will not be immediately posted. Your can write a comment

which will appear when you have uploaded the picture. So, even though it is not exactly the same as Mind The Garden, it is an effective way to identify unknown plants in your garden. Yes, the botanic garden website works very well but if you are a beginner you really need to be somewhere where you can get some professional advice... We are using it to teach our children where things come from in the garden, why they grow in certain places and why and what they look like... They love it! My Web Pen2GO, a Windows tablet pc, is a great learning tool. They can: • Use
