If no response to the first cue was received within 15 s, the next response became the task response. The time interval between each subsequent response was approximately 5 s. ![The schematic drawing of the behavioral procedure of a single session. In the cue-triggered operant task, cues could be delivered in any sequence at any time during the task, and each cue yielded a reward with a probability of q. The reinforcement schedules for the cue-triggered operant task and the standard operant task were different. Whereas in the cue-triggered operant task the reinforcement schedules for the cues and the response were different, in the standard operant task they were identical. In addition, the time intervals between each trial in the cue-triggered operant task and the standard operant task were different. More specifically, the inter
