The present invention relates to a toy baby doll, in particular to a doll comprising a system of articulated parts forming limbs and a support frame, which may be placed on a back of the doll and which may be manipulated so as to form the limbs of the doll. In the field of dolls, namely dolls having flexible limbs, and more particularly dolls comprising a set of articulated parts forming limbs and a frame which may be placed on the back of the doll so that the limbs may be manipulated as desired, an object of the present invention is to improve the connection between the doll's body and the support frame. A further object of the present invention is to provide a doll comprising a fully articulated system of articulated parts for forming limbs of the doll which are not too thin in comparison to the doll's body and which do not reduce the utility and ornamental effect of the doll. To achieve these objects, the present invention provides a toy baby doll with a flexible body having a flexible support frame comprising four articulated columns disposed behind and below the baby doll's body and extending along the longitudinal direction of the doll's body, in which the articulated columns comprise a first frame-shoulder and a second frame-shoulder, connected in articulated manner to one another by a hinge block, each of which articulated columns comprises articulated legs having articulated feet connected in articulated manner to one another by hinges having articulated axes. According to another aspect of the present invention, the articulated columns of the support frame have a slightly curved curvature and the articulated feet have a convex back surface or may have a concave back surface. According to a preferred aspect of the present invention, the articulated columns may be actuated by a suitable drive means, such as a continuous rotary motor or the like. According to another aspect of the present invention, the articulated columns may be associated to a plurality of pivotal axles each pivotally disposed about a corresponding vertical

Q: regex: separate string starting with a '0' from string not starting with a '0' I have a string which will always look like this: string = '5.81 5.95 5.93' I want to separate the numbers between 5 and 3, regardless of if the numbers at the start are 0. So the result would be this: group1 = 5.81 group2 = 5.95 group3 = 5.93 I have tried to do this with the following regular expression, but it always outputs 5.81 The following regex: '(0+|[0-9]+)\$' which I used to capture the numbers at the end of the string, and then the numbers at the beginning of the string. The following regex works for me for capturing only the numbers at the end of the string: `(\d+)$` How can I combine these two regex into one that separates the numbers at both the start and end of the string? A: You can try this solution: `var number = '5.81 5.95 5.93'; var numbers = number.match(/^(\d+(?:[.][0-9]+)?)$/); // ["5.81", "5.95", "5.93"] var result = numbers[0].match(/^([0-9]*)/); // ["`
