Can anyone tell me what is the best way to handle file upload/download in a Table View application which has CoreData being used? This is a very simple app that tracks (text) files and documents on a MacBook. Currently I'm using a separate View Controller class to handle all file manipulations/uploads/downloads. But I'm wondering how people actually do this and if a Table View Controller is the correct way to handle this. The App is basically has a main table view and it's on top of a Document List View. Thanks A: As you are using CoreData, I think it would be wise to integrate NSFetchedResultsController into your solution. By using fetched results controller, you can take the results of your core data model and display them in a table. NSFetchedResultsController is now available in iOS5. You should be able to do something like this: self.theResults = [[NSFetchedResultsController alloc] initWithFetchRequest:theFetchRequest managedObjectContext:theContext sectionNameKeyPath:nil 82138339de
