Protein phosphorylation and dephosphorylation is the molecular mechanism that regulates the activity of many cellular processes. Serine/threonine and tyrosine specific protein kinases and phosphatases regulate processes such as cell division, adhesion, transcription, migration, and the stimulation of blood vessels and platelets. Protein phosphatases (PPs) are also implicated in the regulation of the activity of protein kinases. Recent advances in our understanding of the molecular basis of the catalytic activity of PPs has revealed a new paradigm in the regulation of protein phosphorylation in eukaryotic cells. PP family members are important in a variety of cellular processes including cancer progression, neurodegenerative disease, and cardiovascular disease. As a result, there is considerable interest in the development of inhibitors for the therapeutic control of PP function. Therefore, this review focuses on the regulation and functions of PPs in the nervous system, blood, and cardiovascular
