Purification and characterization of a novel glucose-induced protein from barley seedlings. A novel protein of 27 kDa has been isolated from barley seedlings that exhibits specificity towards glucose and a detectable increase in expression at 2 h following a transition from ambient glucose to a high concentration in the medium.

The protein is also identified in the soluble fractions of cytosol and cell wall. Its accumulation is induced by high but not by low (1 mM) concentrations of glucose. It is partially purified using ammonium sulphate precipitation, gel filtration and anion exchange chromatography. The N-terminal sequence shows homology with elongation factor Tu, but there is no detectable mRNA translation activity in an in vitro translation assay using extracts prepared from the cells in which the protein is expressed, or from Xenopus oocytes injected with transcripts prepared from the cDNA. I'm also not running any risk of being DOS'd as the endpoint is only accessible via a GET parameter. app.js: var _ = require('lodash') , express = require('express')
