■ Worlds of Epic Fantasy and Myth

The world of Tarnished is divided into four planes: The Plane of Elves, the Plane of Humans, the Plane of Beasts, and the Plane of Sacrosa. The Plane of Elves and the Plane of Humans have been matched, and the Plane of Elves and the Plane of Beasts have become more distant. The Plane of Sacrosa has religious structures and knowledge that has not yet been recorded in the world. The Plane of Elves is full of culture and joy, and the Plane of Humans' scientific prowess is striking. The Planes of Elf, Beast, Sacrosan become blurbers named after a star, which are all guardians keeping the balance in the very flat world. The various races of Tarnished are divided among the four planes, and they are also sworn protectors of the balance. This book describes the history of the four planes, as well as the existence of Sacrosan. The Plane of Elves lies in the flat world, and the Plane of Humans lies on the other side of the flat world, and the plane is defended by the guardian elves. The Plane of Beasts has an abundance of flying creatures, and because of them, there are races known as the Griffins that fly in their own territory.

[system.Story] A mother holds her child in her arms, gazing in love at the boy, reflecting upon his life of a happy past. There is no sign of sadness, merely a sense of achievement that comes with having raised him properly. For generations, this mother has raised and cared for her son in the valley of Ecne. But in an instant, this peaceful life comes to an end, as a dragon leaps toward them from the mountain, in an attack of sudden fury. At the same time, the mother turns to her son, and the boy shoots a magic spell that cuts into the monster's body. The boy's wish has been granted. As the dragon's body ignites from the center outwards, the flames of the dragon's body continue to spread, sending the creature spinning towards the heavens. The dragon tumbles in the sky, which causes a chain reaction that spreads the flames of the dragon across the nearby forest. The dragon's body falls like a burning sheet upon the dragon's friends and allies, and as the flames spread, they burst into flames. But this is not the end. At the same time that the dragon drops to the ground, a monstrous beast calls out in pain, and a black mist that smells of death is released from its chest. When the dragon's friends and allies fall to the ground, the black mist burns away their flesh, and takes their bodies. No one survives, except for the boy, a girl with a smile and white hair, and a white cloak. They have both grown considerably. Also, to the girl, the boy says, "My name is Nobles." The girl wonders, "So he's a noble?" "Nobles don't dress like this. Nobles wear clothes." "Are those clothes called nobility too?" "Who knows?" "No matter how they're called, Nobles are different from me." A stranger is ushered into the scene. It is the Dragon Hunter. As Nobles and Dragon Hunters navigate toward Ecne and join the battle, Nobles, Dragon Hunters, and monsters clash. Nobles, Dragon Hunters, and monsters exchange attacks and use their arsenal of weapons. In such a battle, Nobles fight on the front lines and make a name for themselves. Nobles are required to display their heroic skills on the front lines. On the other hand
