The seguential changes in gastric emptying following antrectomy or gastric emptying following antrectomy with pyloric division were studied in 25 dogs using a double-isotope ratio method of measuring gastric emptying. Total pyloric transection was performed in 14 dogs, and antrectomy in 11. The gastric emptying of the antroduodenal contents was significantly delayed following total pyloric transection from 4.2 to 24.2 h, but did not change after antrectomy. The emptying pattern showed gastric emptying 6.0-7.4 h after food ingestion. The small bowel transit was not delayed following total pyloric transection, but was delayed significantly from 6.8 to 12.6 h following antrectomy. On the other hand, the transit of the gastric contents from 6 to 24 h after food ingestion was unaffected by antrectomy. These findings suggest that the small intestinal transit is delayed by antrectomy, but that the delay of gastric emptying occurs following antrectomy with pyloric division.
