1. Use the Lens Blur Filter to create a unique look 2. Make things POP with the Color Correction Filter 3. Get a photorealistic look with the Brush Tool 4. Learn how to work with layers in Photoshop 5. Master the eraser 6. Get professional retouching results with ease

In this Photoshop tutorial, we will learn how to use the Lens Blur Filter and the Color Correction Filter to create a unique look and some really cool effects.

Apply the Lens Blur Filter

The Lens Blur Filter can be found under Filters. When you open it, you will see that it is a raster filter, similar to the Gradient Filter or Hue/Saturation filter. It offers multiple Blurs. Select Lens Blur Filter and press OK. You will be in the Blur dialog. To the right, you will see a couple of sliders for the size of the Blur. You can type in a number, or choose a percentage to display the blur based on a number of pixels. The Lens Blur Filter lets you control the amount of blurring you want. In the photo above, I used the Lens Blur Filter with a 50% Blur. You can see that the original photo was not blurred. However, you can see that a few small blurs have been added. This gives the image a unique look.

Apply the Color Correction Filter

The Color Correction Filter is also a raster filter, and it is similar to the Gradient Filter. However, it provides much more control. Select Color Correction Filter and press OK. You will be in the Color Correction dialog, where you can customize the colors that are changed and the range. Select the Color Range and increase the range to "Exact." The settings above will take the reds and yellows from the sky and make them softer, much like the Red Eye Removal Filter in Photoshop. Select the Color Adjustment and type in the amount of color adjustment that you desire. The numbers are in the percentages. I chose to add 15% correction to make the sky a little bluer, and 45% correction to make the grass greener. 2. Use the Color Correction Filter to get a photorealistic look. If you are looking for a more detailed image, then you can use the Color Correction Filter.

Most of the time I leave my posts up because I like to look back and read, but this one's actually very quick. I'm going to be in Vermont this weekend, so I'll write part of this at the lake. I don't know what I want to say right now about this. I'm glad that the election is over, and I'm glad that Hillary won. I'm relieved that my vote counted and I can take some time to breathe. But, it's hard to feel that way when someone who I agree with so much lost. I am a feminist, and I am saddened by the loss of Hillary Clinton. And although I felt her loss in my gut, it hasn't stopped the rest of me from feeling sick that we lost and that the election is over. Maybe I haven't been able to feel that. Maybe Hillary can't even feel that way. Don't get me wrong - she had a tough go of it. At first I thought her email thing was stupid, then I couldn't stand her hate-speech against Hispanics, and then I couldn't stand her for taking big donations from shady people and corporations (of course, Hillary never said this, she just called people who weren't donating "bought off" or something like that, but she did it for a reason, so you don't have to feel bad for her - she knows what she's doing). But, we knew what we were getting with her. I like her - I really do. She just didn't understand what the people wanted, didn't get how to talk to voters, and she sold her soul (and turned away so many people who wanted her to be a better voice for the middle class). It's hard to think that she could've won, when I know what she could've done. But, I can't think that she actually lost, so I just let myself walk around feeling sorry for myself for a bit. I'm looking at her picture right now. I hope she's okay, but it's hard not to think of her at this point. I know that she's being pilloried for her email scandal, but I can't help but be reminded of the Supreme Court nomination

Radioligand binding studies at the serotonin transporter in BPH. We used radioligand binding studies with [125I]SB 207710, a radioligand that selectively labels the serotonin transporter, to investigate the prevalence and characteristics of serotonin transporter sites in human prostate. While [125I]SB 207710 labeled a single class of high affinity binding sites in membranes of cultured prostate cancer PC3 cells ($K_d = 0.5 \text{ nM}$) and in the membranes of prostate fragments obtained at transurethral resection of the prostate, labeling was not seen in membranes of human prostate tissue obtained at prostatectomy. Our data suggest that, in human prostate, serotonin transporter sites are either absent or present at very low abundance.
