- A huge, huge disappointment... It's a long, long time since I released my last game. Many people are asking me why I'm not making a new one recently. Well, as of June 15, 2015, I'm going back to the drawing board. I'm trying to choose a name for the game that will be free from negative connotations among the general public, and at the same time attract attention. The story is set in a world with a reverse global warming scenario, where the world is inhabited by the people of the modern era and the environment is not being restored. Instead, the environment is becoming polluted, and the people are slowly dying out. I decided to put "epic" in the title, because this world is getting infected with the "epic plague". As a result, one of the characters in the game is probably the only one who is able to see the future, and other characters, who do not know who he is, are just like the characters in an "epic drama" that you see on TV. Personally, I think this is one of the biggest reasons why I didn't make a new game for a long time. There is no point in me trying to sell this game to the general public. This game is for myself alone. If you are considering buying this game, please don't hesitate to contact me. If you have any trouble with the game or the program, please contact me as well. What's new:

-Toothed The first and the most obvious response to my declaration is, "Surely you are mistaken." To those experts, at least for the last five years or so, some of which I have had the opportunity to specialize in, I understand my observations. They also try to question my guts and my...well, most of the time they only listen to my pleas and don't stop to consider why I feel the way I do. Now, as any journalist or commentator knows, dog-slopping along on the pavement, you have to stick your head up. One side wants to tell you that a spell on the 9:00 news doesn't qualify you as an expert. Well, it is a step in the right direction, but it is not enough. But I have been an expert, treated as a professional for 15 years now. I knew exactly what it was I was talking about, and I knew how you respond to it. I knew what we know after examining the visual and written record of feline psychology. And yes, I did know that it is mental illness writ large, that it belongs to no one in particular. I did discover much, much later that someone on the planet has the crowns of his own kings and queens in this..if it exists at all. He has a savage sense of cosmic justice, because he thinks the things he hates the most are the only things that will survive to an ever ending universe. So he has his fish-men elves and other fantasy creatures, in the place of our own climate and populace. We see these visions in everything from the spookiest of ghost stories to the standard American horror film. He plays with us. Minds are an unruly fellow, always have been. Especially ours. But what makes one look like a computer virus? What makes one with that quality sound like John Wayne, when the names don't even translate? Why do those same cat people that understand that they are often smarter than we once took them to be, really not think that their fellows are such colorfully-voiced fiends. Remember, we have the very thing that encourages us to think of human beings as things, in one exercise of judgment. If you have often watched us torture and destroy this planet, then is it so impossible that you might wonder why we decide to torture and destroy the only species on the planet that can hurt us? Does it not occur to

A: You can use "fenced code blocks" like this ``` This is an example of a fenced code block ``` and just put a ` at the end of each line. A: For one particular case that doesn't depend on the wider context of "markdown", you can use Pandoc's -s option for page breaks. With Markdown, the linebreak is used to clearly delineate blocks. That's only so important when you are writing down code, but, for some reason, there is a tendency to omit line breaks from other kinds of block of text, like, well, this paragraph.
