The Court further considers the evidence favorable to the plaintiff and ignores the unfavorable evidence. Id. "The trial court, having had the opportunity to hear and see the witnesses, should be State of fact and able to determine as a matter of law whether a contract has been executed." Id. at 644. If the plaintiff has not shown that the contract was signed, a trial court may dismiss the action for lack of a written contract executed by the parties. Id. If the Court determines that a contract exists between the plaintiff and a third party, the Court considers: (1) whether the contract was fraudulently induced; (2) whether "the contract fairly and reasonably can be construed in the sense that it is 4 based upon terms and it is reasonable to expect that the parties would have entered into the contract had they been aware of the facts upon which the third party claims reliance"; and (3) whether there was "an adequate consideration for the contract." Id. at 647. The Court then determines whether the plaintiff adhered to the contract by giving "performance in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract.� e79caf774b
