HyperMotion is incorporated into in-game animations, where it provides natural reactive, first-person depth perception. When a player kicks the ball, a 3D model of the player's foot will be animated to match their actual foot position, allowing for more accurate first-person view of each player's movement. With all 22 players covered, the resulting 3D models will be animated with an incredibly realistic feel. When players perform the same move, such as a sprint, jump or dive, the 3D models will react seamlessly, preserving the fluidity of player movement and creating a greater sense of realism throughout. Finally, in-game animations, including player behavior, will deliver a more lifelike approach to the game. HyperMotion is a groundbreaking technology, which provides players with a more realistic and immersive experience when viewing the game through the first-person perspective. Player motion on the pitch can be captured and animated in-game using the in-game player motion creation tools, which provides players with more control over their in-game movement. Players can now capture and animate their own movements to play their preferred style of football. Player motion creation tools includes advanced animation functions such as dead ball animation, deceleration, sprint, acceleration, and sprint deceleration, which are aligned with common-sense player behavior in real-life football. All animation variables can also be animated in-game for different reactions, such as a whip-kick or a shot at goal. Read more: FIFA e-Sports highlights for 2016 New features
