President Obama tells American military to stop using torture By DONNA CASSATA and MICHAEL BIYOT, Associated Press Posted: 12/05/2013 06:27:11 AM PST Updated: 12/05/2013 06:27:44 AM PST WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama, as he has promised, delivered on his campaign promise to bring back in line the nation's main interrogation technique, allowing the Pentagon to use only approved techniques like "harsh interrogation methods" as long as they're done by qualified personnel. The president, who said he prefers a "civilized, bipartisan dialogue" to guide the use of harsh interrogation techniques in the future, also left some wiggle room on what exactly constitutes "harsh interrogation methods." The president's decision was spurred by disclosures of interrogation techniques by the CIA last year that led to the deaths of two American prisoners in custody. Obama said these revelations had been used by political opponents as proof that the U.S. doesn't have the moral authority to conduct such interrogations and that they would be used to discredit the U.S. in the eyes of the world. "In short, the CIA's use of harsh interrogation techniques has undermined our standing in the world and fed a narrative of America as a brutal regime," Obama said as he took the long-awaited decision. The president acknowledged that the 2003 Geneva Conventions prohibit certain interrogation techniques, such as waterboarding, but said that "its use is consistent with our values and our laws and is a necessary tool in the effort to keep us safe." The White House also wrote an executive order that would prohibit the CIA from using such methods and ordered the Pentagon to stop using them as well. Advertisement Obama declassified the classified opinion on the use of interrogation techniques written by the Office of Legal Counsel under President George W. Bush. Obama's order makes clear that any new interrogation techniques not authorized by that document must be approved by the Department of Justice, which had the authority under Bush to approve such techniques. The White House's order emphasized that the order doesn't include information on the use of lethal techniques, which remains off-limits under U.S. and international law. The Senate, in the previous Congress, did pass legislation barring interrogation techniques that caused physical or mental pain or stress. But it did not specifically address the use of waterboarding. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-
