The work of a leading sociologist in her field, it draws on a wide range of sources, from material published in Irish Catholic and Irish Times newspapers to books by Irish Catholic clergymen. Karen Nugent questions the nature of Irish Catholicism and explores the experiences of an Irish diaspora whose most obvious link is to Ireland rather than to Britain. She concludes that the theory that Irish Catholicism is simultaneously a part of but also an antithesis to Britain is unwarranted. She suggests that it is possible to see Irish Catholicism in Britain in a number of ways: as a religion of exile, as a sectarian construct of separation from Britain, or as a religion that has adapted itself to Irish exile. In particular, the religious beliefs and practices of Catholics in Britain today are profoundly influenced by Irish Catholicism.Read more About the author (2004) Karen Nugent is a professor at the School of Sociology, University College Dublin. She has published widely on Irish Catholicism, Irish politics, gender issues and religion in modern Ireland.Downregulation of adhesion molecules in dexamethasone-treated activated human T cells. Recently, dexamethasone (Dex) has been shown to affect surface membrane immunoglobulins in a variety of immunocompetent cells. Because T cells, in particular, have been reported to express adhesion molecules such as intercellular adhesion molecule-1 and lymphocyte function-associated antigen-3 upon stimulation, we have used fluorescence-activated cell sorting analysis to examine the effect of Dex on adhesion molecule expression in in vitro-activated human peripheral blood mononuclear cells. Dex treatment, in doses of 0.1-10 microM, caused a dose-dependent suppression of mAb LFA-3-mediated adhesion of activated T cells to fibronectin. Dex also inhibited mAb LFA-3-mediated aggregation of T cells, but not mAb OKT3-mediated aggregation, when co-presented with phytohemagglutinin. The downregulation of adhesion molecule expression by Dex was not due to nonspecific killing and was reproduced by the cyclop
