A high level of panel reactive antibodies (PRA) identifies patients at risk of rejection and transplant nephropathy. FLC monitoring in these high risk patients must continue into the early post-transplant period but the optimal technique is unknown. In the first year, a total of 784 renal transplants with a PRA of >or=50% were performed. Serial samples for FLCs were obtained pre-operatively, on the day of transplant and on post-operative days 3, 7 and 14. Seventy three patients (9%) were found to have a raised FLC concentration. Of these, 30 had a low grade rise (8 to 40 mg/L) with no clinical abnormality. Forty three had a high grade rise (greater than 40 mg/L) with biopsy-proven rejection in 16. Of the 43 with high grade rises, the time to peak serum concentration varied from post-operative day 3 (one transplant) to post-operative day 7 (seven transplants). The sensitivity of the technique was 54% (95% CI 38-70%). This study suggests that a

Related Links INDIANAPOLIS — It's over for the Petersen Events Center, a facility that launched the Indiana Pacers' basketball team to prominence and provided a venue for fans to watch their team dominate the NBA. The Petersen will close for renovations this summer, breaking ground March 13. The $137 million project will feature an expanded basketball court, locker rooms, offices and training rooms, as well as a new concourse and grandstand. Spokesman Peter Incenzo said Sunday the Pacers won't comment on the project until it's complete. He said the renovations will begin about a month ahead of the Pacers' home opener on Oct. 21. "We will literally not be involved in the construction," he said. "We will have no responsibility for the construction other than in terms of securing the facility. The construction will be run by the developer and the architect. We will help facilitate and facilitate the delivery of that (but) we will not be involved." Filling the two-story indoor facility more than 32 years ago, the Petersen prompted what's often described as the team's coming-out party. The now-defunct Hoosier Dome, where the Pacers played in 1988, and the Indianapolis Center, which opened in 1982, weren't home-court powerhouses. The Pacers, led by talented swingman Reggie Miller, had home-court appeal. On top of that, the building's large suite of ringside bleachers and capacity of more than 7,500 were perfect for a young team playing in its first season at the big stage in the Indiana capital. The building quickly became an "Ozzie" and "Duggy" crowd favorite, an affection that spilled over to Miller, who quickly won the hearts of Hoosiers and Pacers fans. The large college-football crowds and the state's love of the team and its star players left the Petersen a valuable and regular gathering place for Pacers fans. And as the Pacers became a major destination for fans to see their favorite players, and mostly for Miller, the arena's appeal broadened. Miller's arrival sent fans of other local teams to the Pacers. For the first time in many years, the Pacers outdrew the Pacers Arena. The team's appearance on the NCAA Tournament in
