Exploratory study to evaluate long-term stress among hospital nurses. The authors conducted an exploratory study to examine whether work-related stress differs among nurses in general hospitals and psychiatric hospitals. Questionnaires were sent to a sample of 531 current employees of a Swedish General Hospital and 30 of its psychiatric wards. Respondents completed a questionnaire that included questions on work-related stress, social support, and feelings of exhaustion. A substantial proportion of respondents reported high stress and low social support and feelings of exhaustion. Nurses in psychiatric wards were generally more stressed, and had less social support and lower feelings of exhaustion than nurses in general hospitals. This study supports the need for further research into the causes of work-related stress among nurses. The present invention relates to an attachment for releasably mounting a water tank such as the fuel tank of a motorcycle or other vehicle to the vehicle frame and to a method of releasably mounting the tank to the vehicle frame. It is known to mount a water tank to the frame of a motorcycle and particularly to the frame of a two-wheeled motorcycle. One conventional method of mounting the tank to the frame is to provide a flanged stub extending from the bottom of the tank and to attach the stub to the frame with bolts. Another conventional method of mounting the tank to the frame is to provide a flanged stub extending from the bottom of the tank and to attach the stub to a mounting bracket secured to the frame with bolts. Still another conventional method of mounting the tank to the frame is to provide a flanged stub extending from the bottom of the tank and to attach the stub to the frame with a connector clip. In the conventional attaching method of mounting the tank to the frame, mounting the tank to the frame is laborious, time consuming and expensive. It is an object of the present invention to provide an attachment for releasably mounting a water tank to the frame of a motorcycle or other vehicle and to a method of releasably mounting the tank to the frame that is laborious, time consuming and inexpensive. In accordance with a first aspect of the invention, an attachment for mounting a water tank to a frame of a motorcycle or other vehicle includes a mounting strap having first and second ends. The first end is fixedly attached to the frame of the vehicle and the second end is releasably attached to the tank.
