The 'Dodo's Pizza' Robbery in the Alpharetta, Ga., area in November was a story that made national news — but there may have been another robbery that night that wasn't as widely reported, one that happened at a local Circle K and involved a much smaller lineup of thieves. The Circle K clerk said the actual heist with pizza was a fake, but it's still a cautionary tale, experts say, about hot cash at inopportune times. The fraud was perpetrated by one of the robbers and involved a pizza shop, according to the Circle K clerk, who wasn't named in print. The security guard told Channel 2 Action News reporter Candace McCowan that the actual pizza heist happened in an adjacent building, not the Circle K. He said a pizza truck came to pick up the pies. The security guard told her he ran upstairs and saw the robber being "held back with pizza boxes" in the room. The guard told McCowan that when he opened the door to the restaurant, more than $120,000 worth of money was just right in the door's opening. It was one of two deposits of stolen money McCowan reported on at Circle K stores. The first was from a Feb. 13, 1992, robbery at the Ridgeview Circle K, which netted $82,000 when she was working at Channel 7 News, then Channel 2 Action News. The robber held up a store clerk at gunpoint at gunpoint and tried to tie up the cashier to prevent the robber's escape. In the Dodo's Pizza case, the same Circle K clerk said a pizza delivery driver came to the back door of the shop and that person was given the pie of liberty — get out of here with it. Circle K sells cold pizza in convenient slices, buns and pizzas baked fresh in the store, said Chris Hendrix. Typically cold pizza is just as hot as the hot pizza sold in grocery stores, but only Circle K's delivers it throughout the Atlanta area, he said. On a hot day, pizza is a quick way to refuel and cool off for football fans, he said. Hendrix said Circlean K's gets around 3,000 regular deliveries a day. The Pizza Hut, Domino's and Papa John's that often do other deliveries at area
