Midazolam 2-10 mg or sedation was used to facilitate restraint and reduce anxiety during brief, routine clinical procedures. Administration of midazolam was associated with cooperative behavior and no respiratory depression. Forty-one patients were enrolled in the study; 17 subjects received midazolam 2 mg; 17 subjects received midazolam 4 mg; and 7 subjects received midazolam 8 mg. The subjects were sedated for dental procedures, orthopedic procedures, endoscopy, minor obstetrical and gynecologic procedures, and other procedures. Subjects in all three groups had a statistically significant lower anxiety score on three of six anxiety scales. No statistically significant differences were found in patient behavior. Patients who received 4 and 8 mg of midazolam had less cooperation than patients who received 2 mg of midazolam (p = 0.04, p = 0.04, respectively). Patients who received 4 and 8 mg of midazolam were more tolerant of restraint than patients who received 2 mg of midazolam (p = 0.03, p = 0.01, respectively). No subject in the midazolam group reported an adverse effect.Q: Textarea on Focus loses focus on key press - in middle of field? If I have a textarea in a form and I type in the text area and press the tab key to move focus to the next field, it loses focus. My users are confused. They wonder why the field they just finished typing in just disappears without warning. I'd really like to use the "tab" key but I need to preserve the focus on the text box so that the user can continue typing. What can I do to preserve the focus in the middle of a text box? A: function handleKey(evt) { c6a93da74d
