German Luger Serial Number Lookup [EXCLUSIVE]

DOWNLOAD NOW

I have a WWII German Luger (parabellum pistol). I bought it used from a retired 93 year old WWII vet who had carried it for over 30 years in the Korean War. He said it was the gun that saved his life several times. He was wounded and the weapon kept him alive. He told me his first hero was his dad and he learned to shoot when he was ten years old. All it has is a 1911 style frame with a rear grip. the manufacturer is unknown but I have the case and it has an extremely good older olive drab finish on it. It looks like it has never been fired. ## German Luger Serial Number Lookup

It was the Luger's distinct characteristics that made it such a success for military and sporting use. The original Luger is now one of the most collectible and sought after pistols of all time. The Parabellum pistol was developed as a 'sub-caliber' design for two purposes: the redesign of the Luger to operate with the lighter 7.65x25mm Parabellum round, and as the basis for the post-war, wider accepted 9mm Parabellum cartridge.[8] The Parabellum pistol was also the first self-loading pistol to see service with the German army. The original Luger was a .30 caliber weapon (7.65mm Parabellum). In the beginning, it was loaded with 4-5 rounds of a new round called 4.75mm Parabellum, which had a case length of 475 grains, equivalent to a modern .380 or 9mm bullet, and a 14.5mm cartridge case. The new 4.75mm round was soon adopted by a number of countries as a smaller bullet version of the 9mm, to be fired from 7.65-mm calibre Parabellum magazines. This Parabellum is extremely rare. The first Luger was made in 9mm Parabellum caliber from 1902, and even today, DWM parabellums are still being made in this caliber. The first genuine Lugers had a 4-groove, ribbed barrel, which was much less prone to wear than the hand polished curved barrels then being made for the Borchardt pistol. Early models also had M1908£SV markings on the top edge of the butt-plate over the ejector. Aside from the two competing manufacturers (DWM and Borchardt), the pistol was almost identical in parts, and was more or less interchangeable. About 360,000 Lugers were made from 1900 to 1920.
