Technical Field The present invention relates generally to a system for determining an event or alarm in a variable-speed marine propulsion system in which an engine's speed is varied by an electronic governor. More particularly, the invention relates to such a system which electronically indicates the absence of an event or an alarm through the use of a variety of pre-defined voltage cut off values. 2. Description of the Related Art In many known marine propulsion systems which have a variable speed governor, the engine speed is controlled by a piston position sensor (or a similar device) coupled to the engine's shaft. When the throttle is not in its neutral position and the governor is in its "off" position, the piston position sensor detects the position of the engine's piston and transmits a signal to the governor which, in turn, applies a throttling force to the throttle which, in turn, regulates the throttle's position and, thus, the engine's speed. When the governor is "on," the piston position sensor is de-energized and the governor applies no throttling force to the throttle. 5ec8ef588b
