yorgos dedicates himself to law reform and the battle for human rights. he joins with other immigrants and eventually becomes a member of the new york state legislators most ardent advocates of immigrant rights.

raised as an orthodox greek, he dons a priest's robe and beard and takes the name father yorgos vatrachas, or father george. aware that the state cannot deport him to greece, father vatrachas promises the westbrook family he will help locate the person who killed their children and punish him or her to death. once their child is returned to her mother, the westbrooks surrender to the man who, they feel, has stolen their child. soon after, robert fitzpatrick (tom cruise) arrives seeking father vatrachas help in his own cause to recover a boy who has been kidnapped and is being held by the russians, and, fitzpatrick tells vatrachas, has been promised to him by an intermediary. fitzpatrick is initially disappointed when he learns of the priest's familial ties to the kidnapper, but vatrachas and his staff agree to help fitzpatrick. in the meantime, vatrachas goes to another greek orthodox priest (nikos argyropoulos) and asks him to form a taskforce in greece to help in the recovery of the boy. at the urging of the westbrook family, vatrachas agrees to assist fitzpatrick, and in return he receives a cross inscribed with the words, from this day forward, i shall dedicate myself to fighting for human rights. that same year, 10-year-old billy eastwood (who is being raised by his mother, single father barry jenkins (russell crowe), and a relative, jordan walker (matthew rhys), is kidnapped on the streets of new york city by mobster james conway (melissa leo) and her ally marcus mccann (kevin bacon). when father vatrachas locates the boys adoptive father in greece, he is given the task of bringing the boy back to the united states.
