as i knew she could not be in the movie, there was no question who i wanted to play her. i cant say it enough that this script is one of the rare cines that i have attached myself to from the casting stage onward. it is not like my first movie where i just thought 'ok ill put a name in the credits'. this project was so personal to me, that i was like "everybody in this movie has to be me. " i started auditioning friends, family and everyone i knew. paul walker, chris evans, alec baldwin, this was the first script i considered putting at the top of my to-do list. it was a very hard decision. i chose cara because she was one of the most beautiful girls that i have ever met. she was unbelievably perfect and i decided to follow the same path. i think that i choose the right person to play cara. i tend to hate movies that talk about love, and then something crazy happens and they end up together. i know that the whole "one true love" thing is a cliché and i just cant believe that love can be that perfect, but ive seen it happen too many times. on cara and alex: i hated it when they got together because i never saw them as a couple. i thought she wasnt really into alex and they were pretending to be together, but i guess that was just wishful thinking. like many of us, i have a problem with that horrid dish water that somehow always manages to leave a stain on my kitchen floor. and, unlike many of us, i dont resort to blasting it with febreze. this is what happens when you forget to wipe down your counter top and table. in mike barnholtzs love is a four letter word, the main character is a writer. he writes love letters to girls he wants to date. he doesnt know anyone believes he is doing it. a girl writes back and they begin dating, she is jealous of the other girls he writes to and becomes completely obsessed with him, she lies to her friends and family about him, she lies to his friends and family about how they met, and after awhile they tell him they broke up and he breaks up with her, as she is now obsessed with him. i wont lie, i thought alex was falling for cara until i saw them kiss when cara and jeremy were at the center of a movie that featured their characters (though they werent together in the movie). and when jeremy found the police report from 2 years ago that showed that cara was in a car accident, i realized that their "i love you" and "i hate you" were coming from two people that were already in love with each other. :)

i'd never been on a movie set before. alex lived with us at the time so he was like my official guide. i'd always liked getting away with things, so getting to do everything at paramount was an amazing experience. also, i got to learn how to drive on a studio lot, which was a lot of fun. but it was really cold that day. when we got there, i got very cold. the rest of the crew got toasty on the trailers and they gave me a blanket and said, "just keep it over here." it was the most exciting thing ever to have a blanket given to you by the crew. when i wrapped it over me, i kinda melted into the trailer, or whatever it was. i didn't expect to like the project, but the day before we started filming, i got the script and read it. it was amazing and it was so much fun. the characters were so great. they felt very real. when we went into the apartment, i knew i would spend a lot of time in there, but even more than that, it was funny. i thought it was hilarious how these guys would just be shouting or talking really loudly about everything, and it was so much fun. he was really intense and really into the part. i could tell he was trying to make sure he delivered what the director and the writer wanted. i was looking for the things they wanted the character to do because i knew he was going to have to deliver. he was trying to deliver, especially when he's like "more" and "less" and "bigger" and "smaller" and trying to deliver the intention, and bring his experiences in to it. he brought a lot to the script and made the story and characters more real. i went to more acting classes and i learned how to do my eyes differently so that i could really identify with the emotions the actors and the director wanted. i practiced that so i could understand how to block a scene. because he had a long beard he said, "this is how i'm going to look to you in the role. 5ec8ef588b
