Research is carried out in specific emphasis areas with the goal of reducing the morbidity and mortality from cancer. These areas are: (1) chemistry and drug development, (2) clinical pharmacology and pharmacokinetics, (3) immune interactions in carcinogenesis, (4) gene therapy and cancer viruses, (5) molecular and cellular biology, (6) basic research in cancer biology, (7) tumor biology, (8) molecular diagnostics, (9) biophysical chemistry and biophysics, (10) environmental influences on carcinogenesis, (11) pre- and perinatal oncology, and (12) treatments for cancer. Three new programs in tumor biology have been developed to promote cancer prevention, prevention of cancer recurrence, and research into the biology of cancer at the cellular, molecular and genetic levels. Programs are focused on the integration of chemistry and biology, prevention, genetics, carcinogen exposure, and cancer control. Chronic cocaine exposure alters myocardial connexin expression and function. Cocaine is a known cardiotoxic agent that, in rodents, is associated with adverse effects on myocardial conduction, increased arrhythmogenic vulnerability and cardiac remodeling. Because connexin channels and hemichannels play an important role in the regulation of ventricular action potential duration and ventricular arrhythmias, we studied the effects of chronic cocaine exposure on myocardial connexin expression. Cocaine exposure (4 weeks) increased the expression of connexin-43, connexin-45, and connexin-50 in rat left ventricle by 1.6-, 1.5-, and 1.7-fold, respectively. These changes were accompanied by an increase in hemichannel permeability, which was determined by using isolated left ventricular myocytes and the clearance of calcein. A previous study of myocardial connexin expression in the heart of hypoxia-induced immature rats demonstrated increased expression of connexin-43 and connexin-45, with no change in connexin 79a2804d6b
