The next step or page is where you will have to make some decisions. If you choose, 'Multiply', you will notice that some of the parts of the image begin to take on the same colors as the surrounding image. This is because the blending options takes the darker parts of the image and blends them into the surrounding image. The other option is 'Screen', which gives you a black and white version of your image. Therefore, you are able to make the darker parts of the image almost completely black meaning if you have a photo or a design that contains a lot of colors, you might want to choose this option. The last option is 'None'. With this option you will turn off all blurring and the blending options will be the same as the original image. This is great if you are just starting to learn Photoshop and you want to see the exact same image as you took it. Once you have selected which blending option you'd like to work with, you need to decide how much you'd like to use the effect. If you were using 'Screen', you'd select 'From: 50%'. If you selected 'Multiply', you'd select 'From: 100%' and so forth. Then, click on 'Blend Mode', in the options bar which will reveal a whole new category of options. You can chose from the various categories that you like and potentially even create your own custom category to be used later.
