U.S. Pat. No. 5,471,531 discloses a method for transferring a redirection database into a database accessible to a user of a customer program. In the redirection database, a list of the fields of the database accessible to the user is made available as a menu. The user enters the name of the desired database, the user may also enter commands and conditions for the transfer into this database. U.S. Pat. No. 5,471,531 is not suitable for an automated transfer of the redirection database into the database accessible to the customer program, since the command line of the program is not checked for the commands. If for example there is no keyword for a field that is required in the customer program, the database accessible to the user cannot be transferred into the customer program. Hitherto, with a customer program (customer program is to be understood here as a program of a customer of the enterprise) a customer has been unable to check a database or a redirection database which has been transferred via the Internet into his database without the assistance of an employee of his enterprise. At present it is possible with the help of a special client program to check the database which has been transferred into the database accessible to the customer program, since the database accessible to the customer program can contain a log file. The log file contains names of databases and a modified flag which means to what extent the database has been transferred into the database accessible to the customer program. It is also possible to use
